Joel C. Rosenberg's New Book Portrays Growing Tensions Between the U.S. & Russia

Bestselling Author Releases The Kremlin Conspiracy March 6

CAROL STREAM, III., Feb. 13, 2018 – In his forthcoming international political thriller, New York Times bestselling author Joel C. Rosenberg ventures into new territory, shifting his focus from the Middle East and the threat of Radical Islamism to a rising new threat to the U.S. and the NATO alliance posed by leaders in Moscow. The Kremlin

Conspiracy releases on March 6, 2018. (Tyndale House Publishers, hardcover, $27.99, ISBN 978-1496406170).

The grandson of Orthodox Jews who escaped the pogroms of Czarist Russia in the early years of the 20th century and emigrated to the United States in search of political and religious freedom, Rosenberg says the subject is not just fiction for him "it's personal."

As a former aide to U.S. and Israeli political leaders, Rosenberg's story lines and richly detailed plots are derived from his personal conversations with world leaders and intelligence operatives and have been described as being "ripped from tomorrow's headlines."

The plot of The Kremlin Conspiracy is no different, drawing parallels with real-world events and mounting tensions between the U.S. and Russia. The novel will be released just prior to the March 18 Russian presidential elections in which Vladimir Putin is certain to win and consolidate his iron grip on Russia's military and economy.

"After almost two decades of writing novels about the Middle East, I'm convinced that Vladimir Putin is more dangerous than radical Islam," said Rosenberg. "Most Americans regardless of where they fall on the ideological spectrum - see the gravity of the threat posed by Russia. That said, I'm not convinced enough leaders in Washington share our concerns. The Putin threat is often over-shadowed by the challenges posed by Iran and North Korea, among others, but make no mistake – it's real and it's rising."

In The Kremlin Conspiracy, the American President and his team are distracted by domestic political troubles and rising tensions in North Korea and Iran, and risk failing to grasp the magnitude of the threat posed by a nuclear-armed Russian leader who keeps taking military action against his neighbors without serious international consequences. The Russian leader considers the American President "a neophyte, a boorish fool" and envisions himself as a 21st-century Czar who will restore the Russian Motherland to her former glory.

In the thriller, the developing international crisis is told through the eyes of two very different men with very different vantage points – a former U.S. Secret Service agent, Marcus Ryker, who rises through the ranks to become part of the president's protective detail; and Oleg Kraskin, a senior aide and son-in-law to the Russian president.

The stories of Ryker and Kraskin begin on parallel tracks, and then intersect in unexpected ways as Russia's expansionist policies bring the world to the brink of nuclear war.

Rosenberg was called by U.S. News & World Report a "modern day Nostradamus." His first novel, written before 9/11 (though published in November 2002), opened with a kamikaze-like attack by radical Islamist terrorists on an American city, leading to a war against Saddam Hussein's Iraq. His most recent trilogy of novels foretold the explosive rise of the Islamic State and envisioned horrific terrorist attacks by ISIS against the U.S., Israel, Jordan, Egypt and the Palestinians.

"To misunderstand the nature and threat of evil is to risk being blindsided by it," Rosenberg said. "All Americans – and especially leaders in Washington and throughout the West – need to wake up to the serious new threat we face from Vladimir Putin before it's too late. If a political thriller can not only entertain people but capture their moral imagination and wake them up to grave dangers, then I'm doing my job."

New Poll Reveals Majority of Americans Are Not Convinced Trump is Doing Enough to Protect US from Putin Threat

Overwhelming majority of respondents believe Putin, Russian government pose a clear and present danger to the national security of the US and our allies

CAROL STREAM, III., March 7, 2018 – A new survey reveals a majority of Americans are increasingly concerned by the threat Russian President Vladimir Putin poses and worried that President Donald Trump is not doing enough to keep the nation and our allies safe.

The survey was conducted on behalf of political analyst and New York Times bestselling author Joel C. Rosenberg by McLaughlin & Associates, which has done polling on behalf of a number of U.S. and foreign clients. McLaughlin & Associates polled 1,000 likely U.S. voters regarding three specific questions related to Russia, Putin and President Trump.

"Putin's recent State of the Union address was his most belligerent in 18 years," Rosenberg said. "He bragged about Russia's nuclear arsenal and complained that no one was listening to his claims of achieving nuclear superiority. He even showed a video of Russian missiles pointed toward Florida.

"Congress overwhelmingly passed a sanctions bill last year, but thus far President Trump hasn't taken action," Rosenberg continued. "It is time to impose sanctions on Russia for their increasingly aggressive behavior, including unsuccessful efforts to subvert US elections."

Only 34.5 percent of Americans said they were convinced the president truly understands Russia and is doing enough to counter the threat. On the other hand, 51.9 percent said they were not convinced and want Trump to do "much more," while 13 percent weren't sure.

When broken down by political affiliation, the survey showed 77.5 percent of liberals, 26 percent of conservatives and 61 percent of moderates said they were not convinced Trump understands the threat.

Given Russia's history of invasions, aggression and interferences, 72.5 percent agreed that Putin and the government of Russia pose a clear and present danger to the national security of the United States, our NATO allies in Europe and our Mideast allies, such as Israel.

"Most officials in Washington are focused on the threats posed by North Korea, Iran, ISIS and al Qaeda," Rosenberg said. "But as serious as those threats are, leaders must not ignore how grave a threat Putin poses to the U.S. and our NATO and Middle Eastern allies."

A full 60.5 percent worry Putin could be planning other military attacks – perhaps the invasion of a small NATO country, or a Middle Eastern country – because he thinks the international community is not really willing to stop him.

"The national security team President Trump has put into place – from Vice President Mike Pence to Defense Secretary James Mattis to CIA Director Mike Pompeo, among others – are first-rate professionals. They clearly understand the threat and the stakes," Rosenberg said. "But President Trump and Congressional leaders in both parties must urgently work together to develop and lay out for the American people a comprehensive strategy to counter the Russian threat and dramatically strengthen the NATO alliance, lest today's fictional premise become tomorrow's nightmare scenario."

The poll results reinforce the theme of Rosenberg's newest political thriller, The Kremlin Conspiracy, specifically that the threat of evil should not be underestimated. The book tells the story of a fictional leader in Moscow who fashions himself a 21st century Czar, all while the American President and his team are distracted by domestic political troubles and rising tensions in North Korea and Iran.

The plot of The Kremlin Conspiracy could be described as "ripped from tomorrow's headlines." In the novel, the fictional President of the Russian Federation is plotting a lightning-fast military attack to re-conquer the three Baltic States — Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania — once enslaved by Moscow during the Soviet era. Given that all three countries have been NATO members since 2004, the move risks triggering a nuclear war with the U.S. and NATO alliance.

This week, foreign ministers of all three Baltic nations are in Washington, laying the groundwork for an April 3 summit between President Trump and the presidents of the Baltic States to discuss the Russian threat and urge the U.S. to pre-position more troops and equipment in the region to create a credible deterrence to Putin.

"To misunderstand the nature and threat of evil is to risk being blindsided by it," Rosenberg said. "What if our leaders in Washington are so focused on the threats emanating from North Korea, Iran, ISIS, and China—true threats, all—that they are blindsided by a Russian tyrant plotting the collapse of NATO? I pray this is only the stuff of a high-octane political thriller. But with every day that passes, I fear it may be more fact than fiction."
